Class 5

I haven't been "jailbreaking" for long, but since I started doing it early last year, it is one of those things I find enjoyable and productive, as it allows me to customize aspects of the software and user interface that I usually don't have access to with the stock firmware. I'm not a developer, but I do like having control over my devices' functions. My favorite devices to jailbreak are Apple iOS devices, such as iPad, iPod Touch, and iPhone, and I hope doing so will be considered legal as it has been for the last two years. I would also like to see more jailbreak options for video game consoles, such as the Playstation 3 and Xbox 360.

As an owner of electronic devices, I have the right to control what those devices do, and although the manufacturer may prevent me from doing so in the device's firmware, jailbreaking grants me that right.
