

I support the need to jailbreak smartphones, tablets and gaming consoles.

As a user of these devices the possibilities are limitless of what can be done with these devices in an open state. Increased functionality is only the tip of the iceberg. Devices should not be artificially limited by the software running on them.

I wish to ensure I have the legal authority to jailbreak any device I have purchased.

What if jailbreaking is illegal? Am I going to lose my warranty because I chose to jailbreak and change the behavior of a button on my phone? Yes, every company would turn their backs on these users.

Should I really be SOL because I wish to add functionality and go beyond the artificially imposed limits that the manufacturer decided when they installed the operating system? No.

Should I have to risk jailtime for using software that was developed independantly of a major corporation? NO!

Keep the market free and open, don't crush independant developers. Keep jailbreaking devices legal!
