

loading what is commonly open source operating systems and other software on a phone or tablet type device does not constitute a crime, nor does such action infringe on any copyrights since the original software is essentially obliterated and other software put in its place.