

January 25, 2012

To whom it may concern:

I am writing this letter to demonstrate my support for the DMCA exemption to allow “jailbreaking” of Smart Phones, Tablets and Game Consoles. The continued ability to do this gives users, who have acquired their devices legally and in many cases paid handsomely for them, the ability to use their devices without limitations.

The practice of “jailbreaking” does not stymie or discourage the innovation and productions of devices by the manufacturers. It actually does the opposite encouraging the sales of devices and allowing manufacturers to see what is possible and in some cases a template for them to copy the functionality. Because of this injection of innovation it is an important practice for these industries.

Thanks for your attention to this matter.

Sincerely,

Jeremy Spurgin