

The jailbreaking exemption I'm supporting are iOS Devices.

I'm just a everyday user. I want to ensure I have the legal authority to jailbreak all iOS devices. The limitations I would face is possibly not being able to use my iPhone for texting and calling. My iPhone was bought in the States because it's cheaper that to buy it in my country. If I wasn't able to jailbreak, I could easily get bored of my iPhone because without DreamBoard & WinterBoard, I wouldn't be able to change the UI of my iDevice and it would kinda suck. Since it would be a waste of money to upgrade from iPhone 4 to 4S the Siri port helps alot. It would be difficult for me to manage my life without reminders, alarms, and it also helps me see the weather in my area so I know to bring a jacket or not. Without jailbreaking, some hobbyists who do themes for money wouldn't have things to work on. And the YouTube.app on the iPhone sucks. So I use ProTube which is a alternative to the stock Youtube.app. Plus, Protube loads videos 5x faster, lets you download a video in 1080p, 720p, 360p, and even .MP3. Jailbreaking should be legal for all devices nationwide because we deserve the freedom of our devices.

From,
Kevin Ramos