

It has come to my attention that the ruling on jailbreaking mobile devices is coming up for expiration. I feel strongly that we need to extend this ruling. I have several devices, iPhone 3g, iPhone 4 and an iPad that I have jailbroken so that I can get the full use out of the device that I purchased with my own hard earned money.

Since the ruling, there has been an outbreak of developers and users for the jailbreaking community that would see criminal punishments if this ruling were to expire. This is unacceptable! Companies that feel that they have full control over a device that they sell to you at a high price is a ridiculous concept. We need to put them back in their place. They are manufacturers, not overlords. It is for this reason and many others that I ask for the extension of the ruling on jailbroken devices.

Sincerely,

Michael Moreau
