

I support the jailbreaking exception for both smartphones and tablets. It is insane that a device I spend so much money to purchase still be controlled by someone else.

Being in IT, I am a much more technical savvy person and rely on the added functionality that might be confusing to a non-technical person. I can appreciate that the device manufacture might need to keep it simple for the uninformed masses, but I should be able to use a device that I payed for however I want.