

It's simple, really. We pay for a $500 device. We should have the right to use it the way we want. If I buy a car, the dealer doesn't tell me that I'm not allowed to look under the hood or buy oil from someone other than the dealer. Yes, we understand jailbreaking voids the warranty and that we cannot hold Apple, or any other company responsible for something that goes wrong in the process. However, jailbreaking simply isn't a crime.