Keeping Jailbreaking Legal and extending the DMCA exception to all tablets
Class 5

Innovation should not be crippled by making the modification of file systems illegal. Jailbreaking helps the economy by providing developers jobs and platforms to create for. It also provides users the ability to make their devices more functional.

Apple in particular has benefited from the jailbreak community, the majority of the improvements in iOS updates were available for jailbroken devices before Apple adapted them (WiFi Sync, Copy and Paste, grouping apps into folders, text expansion, multitouch gestures...)

I don't feel that being able to dim my screen beyond the factory standard limit or adding additional icons to my dock, or putting folders in folders should be forbidden. If Apple doesn't want to develop those features into iOS, that is fine, but preventing others from developing these tweaks seems ridiculous.
