

I am supporting the jailbreak exemption for all devices. I believe if you buy an item then you should be able to alter it in any way you wish. I am a jailbreak user and if I cannot jailbreak then I will not be able to take full advantage of my device such as having shortcuts to turn off and on WiFi on my device. There are other useful shortcuts that jailbreaking allows me to have. The main electronic that I need to have the jailbreak for would be for the iPhone. There are many shortcuts that make my phone much easier to use.

In conclusion the consumer bought the item and they should not be prohibited from altering the device. The companies should not be able to control what we do with the devices.

Sincerely,

Christopher Flores