I believe that every American should have the right to use their legally purchased hardware to run whatever software they choose. This can allow for many features that the original manufacturer did not foresee the need for, such as keeping older devices secure and up to date, personalization, accessibility improvements, and more.

Tablets, phones, and game consoles are all powerful computing devices, and the owners of these devices should not be criminalized for writing and using home-made software. Home programming has a long history and has helped grow the economy and educate future generations of programmers.

Thank you.
