

I thought it would be better if I had a really good reason why I jailbreak; like the deaf or physically disabled whose letters I've seen. And I am disabled, but that's not why I jailbreak, and it doesn't need to be. I jailbreak because I like to customize my devices and make them really mine, and I spent hundreds of dollars to buy them and hundreds more in monthly fees to use them. They should do what I want them to do, NOT what Verizon wants them to do. Verizon gets it $100 from me every month. I don't use 1/4 of the voice minutes or 1/2 of the data they are charging me for (because their system is down here more often than it's up, but that's another story) and if I don't want Blockbuster video, or Verizon video, or Motorola's Motocast crapware on it I should be able to remove them. And if prefer Sweetehome to Motoblur because it looks awesome, that's my choice as well. My phone will cost me $2700 over my two year contract with Verizon, and Verizon gets that money even if I remove the unwanted crapware and customize my home screen. Why should I not have this right?
