

Name: Timothy Sullivan
Class of works: 5

I believe that I, as a purchasing consumer of an Android product, should have the right to root my phone in order to tinker with it and make it operate in the most efficient manner. When I first purchased my Android phone, the operating system was loaded with irremovable programs and bloatware that was constantly running, slowing down my phone and draining its battery. After rooting my device I am able to remove these unnecessary programs and make my phone run as efficiently as possible. If you buy a car, you are able to change the parts on it in order to make it operate better, I do not see any reason why my phone should be any different.