There is no real issue here. Linux is for people who want a stable, secure, and FREE based OS. The charges the MPAA are claiming is for Piracy, however there is NO piracy invoved here. You can pirate DVD's w/o the DeCSS code. Pirating DVD's is pointless for the following reasons: 1) A burnable DVD costs 4 to 5 times the amount of 1 manufactured DVD 2) A burner costs thousands of dollars. 3) copying several gigs of info to your hard drive is a waste of space. 4) transfering that amount of information over the net is inefficiant. 650 MB, an iso image, takes me 4 to 5 days with a 56k modem we are talkin thousands of Megs for a DVD. No one would waste that much time, let alone resources to do that. The MPAA is trying to make Hackers look like crackers. Hackers just want knowledge and explanation. Crackers are destructful and unconstructive. Please do not let the MPAA win this case. Thank you for your time. Brian Hellman
