

The DMCA does not allow decryption of another person's encryption routines. That means that people under you in a company, can encrypt messages having to do with company intelligence. Also it does not allow creating security tools to test your own system. The way that security holes are found is through hacking.

This is a violation of our freedom of expression. The law would also prohibit you from making backups of the videos and software you purchase. That would be like saying "You cannot make any paper copies of any document".

Thank you for your time.

Michael Kline