

Seriously, if this country's Legislative bodies would care anything about the visual arts, there would have been protections set up and enforced at the time the NEA had any teeth. With the current conservative weight of SCOTUS and the predispositions of the Republican party to strip everything that is not profitable for corporations, particularly the military-industrial strengths from K-Street, Big Pharma, Wall Street and for-profit health care venues, there is no chance for any legislation, let alone an enforcement agency, to EVER be passed and found Constitutional in America.
