Because employers may be subject to civil penalties if it is later determined that the termination was involuntary, the Department strongly recommends that notice be provided to individuals who experienced any termination of employment. The Department has updated its model Supplemental Information Notice. Using this model to provide notice to these individuals satisfies the requirements of ARRA, as amended by CEA.

f. Notice of Extended Election Period

The Notice of Extended Election Period is required to be sent by plans that are subject to COBRA continuation provisions under Federal or State law. It must include the information described above and be provided to ALL individuals who experienced a qualifying event that was a termination of employment from April 1, 2010 through April 14, 2010, were provided notice that did not inform them of their rights under ARRA, as amended by CEA, and either chose not to elect COBRA continuation coverage at that time OR elected COBRA but subsequently discontinued that coverage. This notice must be provided before the end of the required time period for providing a COBRA election notice.7 The Department has updated its model Notice of Extended Election Period. Using this model to provide notice to these individuals satisfies the requirements of ARRA, as amended by CEA.

III. For Additional Information

For additional information about ARRA’s COBRA premium reduction provisions as amended by CEA, contact the Department’s Employee Benefits Security Administration’s Benefits Advisors at 1–866–444–3272. In addition, the Employee Benefits Security Administration has developed a dedicated COBRA Web page www.dol.gov/COBRA that will contain information on the program as it is developed. Subscribe to this page to get information on the program as it is occurring during the effective dates of the premium reduction program are not complete if they fail to include information on the availability of the premium reduction.

Docket No. RF 2009–1B
CRB Webcasting III

MEMORANDUM OPINION ON MATERIAL QUESTIONS OF SUBSTANTIVE LAW

I. Procedural Background

On February 12, 2010, RealNetworks, Inc. (“RealNetworks”) filed a motion requesting referral to the Register of Copyrights of what it identified as two novel material questions of substantive law. That motion was denied by the Copyright Royalty Judges on March 30, 2010. Order Denying Motion Requesting Referral of Novel Material Questions of Substantive Law, Docket No. 2009–1 CRB Webcasting 111.

The second question proposed in RealNetworks’ motion sought to identify whether the Register of Copyrights (“Register”) or the Copyright Royalty Judges (“CRJs”), or both, have the authority to determine the constitutionality of 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5), a provision that inter alia calls upon the CRJs to allow agreements made pursuant to the Webcaster Settlement Acts to be admitted into evidence or otherwise considered only if both parties to such agreements authorize submission of the agreements in a CRJ proceeding. While RealNetworks’ motion did not properly frame that question as novel within the meaning of 17 U.S.C. § 802(f)(1)(B), Copyright Royalty Judge William J. Roberts Jr., in an order issued subsequent to the CRJs’ initial denial of RealNetworks’ motion, determined that there were referable questions within the meaning of 17 U.S.C. § 802(f)(1)(B). That subsection provides, in pertinent part, that “one or more Copyright Royalty Judges may ... request from the Register of Copyrights an interpretation of any material questions of substantive law that relate to the construction of provisions of this title and arise in the course of the proceeding.” Section 802(f)(1)(A)(ii) allows a 14-day response period. However, section 802(f)(1)(B)(i) provides that when the CRJs request a decision by the Register on “a novel material question of substantive law concerning an interpretation of those provisions of this title that are the subject of the proceeding” (emphasis added), the Register shall transmit her decision within a 30-day response period. A novel question of law is one that “has not been determined in prior decisions, determinations, and rulings described in section 803(a).” Id. On April 20, 2010, the Register advised the CRJs that she had determined that the material questions of law that are the subject of the Order are novel because they have not been determined in prior decisions, determinations, and rulings described in 17 U.S.C. 803(a). See 17 U.S.C. 802(f)(1)(B)(ii).

On April 30, 2010, the Register responded in a Memorandum Opinion to the CRJs that addressed the novel material questions of law. To provide the public with notice of the decision rendered by the Register, the Memorandum Opinion is reproduced in its entirety, below. The timely delivery of the Register’s response requires that “the Copyright Royalty Judges shall apply the legal determinations embodied in the decision of the Register of Copyrights in resolving material questions of substantive law.” See 17 U.S.C. 802(f)(1)(B)(ii).

II. Summary of Parties’ Arguments

In its motion requesting referral of novel material questions of law, RealNetworks argues that the CRJs and the Register lack authority to determine that section 114(f)(5) is unconstitutional. In doing so, it observes that the Supreme Court has repeatedly stated that “adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments has generally been thought beyond the jurisdiction of administrative agencies.” Thunder Basin Coal Co. v. Reich, 510 U.S. 200, 215 (1994) (citing Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. 361, 368 (1974)). Additionally, RealNetworks notes the D.C. Circuit’s observation that agencies may lack the institutional competence to resolve certain issues, such as the constitutionality of a statute. Hettinga v. United States, 560 F.3d 498, 506 (D.C. Cir. 2009) (citing, McCarthy v. Madigan, 503 U.S. 140, 147 (1992)).

SoundExchange Inc. (“SoundExchange”) filed a brief opposing RealNetworks’ motion requesting referral of novel material questions of law in which it echoed RealNetworks’ views that the CRJs and the Register lack authority to determine that section 114(f)(5) is unconstitutional. In doing so, SoundExchange notes that RealNetworks does not attempt to argue that the present circumstances offer an exception to the general rule, set forth in Thunder Basin, that agencies do not have the authority to determine the constitutionality of congressional enactments.

In RealNetworks’ reply in support of its motion for referral of novel material questions of law, it observes that RealNetworks and SoundExchange both cited Thunder Basin for the proposition that adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments is generally beyond the jurisdiction of an administrative body. RealNetworks’ arguments, while not perfectly aligned with the United States Supreme Court’s decisions, are nonetheless based on a consistent and well-reasoned analysis of the relevant constitutional principles.
asserts that while the private parties agree that the general rule should apply in this case, the Court held in Thunder Basin that the general rule did not apply in that case, explaining: “This rule is not mandatory, however, and is perhaps of less consequence where, as here, the reviewing body is not the agency itself but an independent Commission” that “has addressed constitutional questions in previous enforcement proceedings.” Thunder Basin, 510 U.S. at 215 (1994).

III. Register’s Determination

The Register acknowledges the rule set forth in Thunder Basin that adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments is generally beyond the jurisdiction of administrative agencies. Thunder Basin, 510 U.S. at 215 (1994) (citing Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. 361, 368 (1974) (adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments has generally been thought beyond the jurisdiction of administrative agencies)); See also Motor & Equipment Mfrs. Ass’n v. Environmental Protection Agency, 627 F.2d 1095, 1115 (D.C. Cir. 1979).2 The parties are in agreement that this general rule applies to foreclose the Register and the CRJs from determining the constitutionality of 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5). However, in order to determine whether the Register or the CRJs do not have the authority under the provisions of the Copyright Act to determine the constitutionality of 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5), the exceptions to the general rule must be considered.

While the case law regarding exceptions to the general rule against agency adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments is slim, in Thunder Basin, the general rule was not found to apply because the reviewing body was not the agency itself. Rather the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission was an independent Commission established exclusively to adjudicate disputed enforcement measures undertaken by the Mine Safety and Health Administration pursuant to the statute in question. The court also observed that even if the agency or independent Commission were not authorized to determine the constitutionality of congressional enactments, the constitutional claims could be meaningfully addressed in the Court of Appeals, thus avoiding the “serious constitutional question” that would arise if an agency’s organic statute were construed to preclude all judicial review of a constitutional claim. Id.

Case law reveals additional considerations that are relevant in determining whether it is proper to apply the general rule against agency adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments. For instance, the general rule “is subject to Congress’s allocation of adjudicative responsibility.” Riggin v. Office of Senate Fair Employment Practices, 61 F.3d 1563, 1569 (Fed. Cir. 1995) (citing Thunder Basin, 510 U.S. at 215 (1994)). Additionally, a finding that the agency lacks jurisdiction to decide constitutional questions is especially likely when the constitutional claim asks the agency to act contrary to its statutory charter. Riggin, 61 F.3d at 1569; See also Weinberger v. Salfi, 422 U.S. 749, 765 (1975); Johnson v. Robison, 415 at 367; Public Utilities Commission v. United States, 355 U.S. 534, 539 (1958). In the Riggin case, the general rule was not applied in part because the constitutional issue did not require the agency to question its own statutory authority or to disregard any instructions Congress had given it.

In the case at hand, the established exceptions to the general rule against agency adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments are not applicable. Nonetheless, the Register is subject to Congress’s allocation of adjudicative responsibility to determine the constitutionality of statutory provisions. Additionally, the CRJs are not the type of independent Commission at issue in Thunder Basin, which was established to review agency actions. While it is true that 17 U.S.C. § 802(f)(1) calls upon the Register to, in certain circumstances, either “an interpretation of any material questions of substantive law that relate to the construction of provisions of this title and arise in the course of the proceeding” or “an interpretation of those provisions of this title that are the subject of the proceeding,” these provisions address interpretation of statutory provisions themselves and do not authorize determinations as to the constitutionality of such provisions. 17 U.S.C. § 802(f)(1)(A)&(B). Similarly, the Register’s authority to review the CRJs’ final determinations for errors of law is also directed toward material questions of substantive law under title 17, not toward the constitutionality of such provisions. 17 U.S.C. § 802(f)(1)(D). Like the Mine Safety and Health Administration (“MSHA”) in Thunder Basin, the CRJs are tasked with carrying out statutory duties prescribed by Congress. However, unlike the independent Commission in Thunder Basin, which had broad authority to review the actions of the MSHA, the Register, as indicated above, has a narrower authority in these proceedings, which allows her only to determine issues of substantive law under title 17. Finally, unlike the constitutional claim in Riggin, a determination by the CRJs that 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5) is unconstitutional would necessarily require the CRJs to act contrary to their statutory charter, which pointedly directs the CRJs to act in accordance with the provisions of section 114(f)(5).3 Under that provision, the CRJs may allow agreements made pursuant to the Webcaster Settlement Acts to be admitted into evidence or otherwise considered only if both parties to such agreements authorize submission of the agreements in a CRJ proceeding.

As neither the Register nor the CRJs have any specific authority under Chapter 7, or any other provisions of the Copyright Act, to determine the constitutionality of 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5), and because no other established exceptions to the general rule against agency adjudication of the constitutionality of congressional enactments are applicable, the Register concludes that neither the Register nor the CRJs have the authority under the Copyright Act to determine the constitutionality of 17 U.S.C. § 114(f)(5).

2. Various administrative agencies have come to the same conclusion when confronted with questions regarding their authority to determine the constitutionality of statutory provisions. 63 Fed. Reg. 6614, 6620 (February 9, 1998) (Department of Labor finding that, as the agency given the administrative authority to implement a statutory provision, it has no authority to question the constitutionality of the statute); 56 Fed. Reg. 11653, 11660 (March 20, 1991) (Federal Trade Commission finding that it does not have authority to determine the constitutionality of the statutes it enforces); 50 Fed. Reg. 35418, 35422 (August 30, 1985) (Federal Communications Commission finding that administrative agencies are not tasked with the duty to adjudicate the constitutionality of a federal statute, citing Johnson v. Robison, 415 U.S. at 368).
3. 17 U.S.C. §801(b)(1) calls upon the CRJs to “make determinations and adjustments of reasonable terms and rates of royalty payments as provided in sections 112(e), 114, 115, 116, 118, 119, and 1004.” (emphasis added).
